INFORMATION PACKET:

THE TOWN OF HUDSON, NEW HAMPSHIRE

Once part of Nottingham, Massachusetts, the town was separated in 1741 and named Nottingham West. In 1830, voters petitioned to have the town renamed, at which time the name of Hudson was chosen because of its position near the Merrimack River, once supposed to flow east from the Hudson River, creating the boundary line between Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

Today, Hudson is a growing Town, with an estimated population of 25,000 residents. Hudson is located in the state's most populous county on the Massachusetts border. The Town of Hudson hosts numerous high tech companies and small businesses, as well as provides a pleasant home for many people who commute to jobs in the Boston area.

Hudson is located on the east bank of the Merrimack River. The Town's southern border is the Massachusetts State line (Tyngsboro, Massachusetts). It is bordered in the north by Londonderry and Litchfield; on the east by Pelham and Windham; and on the west by the City of Nashua, New Hampshire.

The primary artery leading to and from Hudson is Route 3. New Hampshire State Routes 3A, 102 and 111 also run through the town.
